The Commission discussed the developing strategies to protect the State's existing military missions and positions the State to be competitive for new and expanded military missions; consider all current and anticipated base realignment and closure criteria; and cultivate the enhancement of military value of the contributions of Missouri military installations to national defense strategies. The challenge is to move from a short-sighted and reactionary to long-term vision and strategic plan.

B. Economic Impact Report-the challenge is to first decide where the biggest challenges facing Missouri's military installations and communities will be, and then determine how best to get there. To best develop a strategic plan, the Commission must have empirical data regarding the military economic impact to the State of Missouri.

The purpose of the program is to create temporary jobs to assist in the clean-up of public areas and restoration as result of the disaster. These jobs include debris removal, restoration of public facilities, and working on projects that and provide food, clothing, shelter and other humanitarian assistance for disaster victims. More than 900 civilians are temporarily employed through the program.

The 121st Air Control Squadron consists of 185 soldiers who are in the process of setting up a $30 million air control radar system. Lt. Col. Boothman brings with him the return of air control missions to the Barracks, which increases the viability of the Base as a military asset.
